2 Indian activists injured by gunmen in S. Dakota fracas

United Press International

WAGNER, S.D. American Indian Movement co-founder Russell Means and another AIM leader were shot and seriously wounded early Wednesday on the Yankton Sioux Indian Reservation. Police later arrested five suspects in Sioux City, Iowa. Two of them were charged with attempted murder.

Means was shot in the abdomen. His companion, John Thomas, was hit in the neck and chest. Both men were taken to a Yankton hospital, where they underwent surgery.

U.S. Attorney William Clayton of Sioux Falls, S.D., charged suspects Mike Weston and James Weddell with attempted murder, according to the Bureau of Indian Affairs in Wagner and the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Minneapolis.

Three other suspects, Frances Allen Archambault, Terry Provost and a juvenile who was not identified, were charged with being accessories after the fact in aiding the escape.

The five were being held in the Sioux City jail pending arraignment today before a U.S. magistrate in Sioux Falls, the FBI said.

The shooting occurred about 4 a.m. outside an Indian housing district home in Wagner, the main community on the reservation.

A source in Wagner quoted an unidentified witness as saying Means and Thomas stopped in front of the house in a car in which they were riding with two women.

The witness said four men emerged from the house and started firing guns into the air. When one of the women jumped out of the car and started running, one of the armed men pointed a gun at her.

Thomas got out of the car, the witness said, and told the man that if he wanted to shoot someone, he could shoot him.

The other woman started running and one of the armed men shot at her. Then one or more of the men shot Thomas and Means.

A hospital spokesman said the small caliber bullet that hit Means missed all vital organs. His condition was listed as satisfactory and Thomas was listed in serious condition.

Means and Thomas were on the reservation to plan an American Indian treaty conference scheduled for June. Thomas, of Oklahoma, is coordinator of the conference.
